This Halloween update goes more in depth into the idea of survival horror. It was inspired by the new survival horror tropes that came with the popularization of the survival horror genre. Rather than trying to change the structure of the game and make the game turn into a survival horror game, we decided to take the next step and infuse more horror elements into the base game and make it more eerie and more dangerous. We then created a series of backgrounds to go along with it, the design of these backgrounds takes some inspiration from our favourite horror movies, some from classic horror comics and pulp magazines and the like. We're really proud of them and they definitely improve the atmosphere and add more suspense and tension to the game. During this update we'll be adding new locations, lots of new props and art assets that give more vibe of horror and our main setting of ruin, the sea. We're also working on a massive world building revamp and while we aren't ready to give you a definite time, we want to provide you with a rough idea of the changes we're working on. We won't be able to provide the full amount of details, but rest assured, this is going to be an epic revamp. Dwarf Fortress Developer Confirms Ocelot Released With that said, the wait is over! After years of development hell, we're thrilled to announce that Ocelot has been released! We have, in fact, now been a complete Free to play game for several years, but we have never stopped adding in new content, over 3 years now, but what we consider to be our biggest release was the Megaton update, two years ago now, which added a new continent and some new enemies and weapons, and from then we have been steadily adding more and more features, bringing new systems, new skills, new upgrades, new combat, new items and new weapons. In the past 3 years we have also been working to make the game a lot more stable and robust, and there have been many bug fixes and other improvements that we have not really publicly announced, but you've definitely seen them in the game. We have recently added in new content over the past year, starting with a new continent, all new weapons and more new items, and we hope you will enjoy these additions and that you'll appreciate the content that has come with the game since Megaton. ap foundation big day: Waay, waay SAD You know it's not going to be a good day when you're greeted with a death stare from the great Bipolar Eider. That's me, my daughter, and Bipolar Eider's mum. Click for some photos and story. Which one is the big day? Before I take my leave of this post, I'd like to reflect that my daughter Cairn Banks can't go anywhere without protest from someone. This is because she is the personification of good in the world. If something can be shown to benefit the world in any way, she will highlight it. For example, during the Melbourne food and wine festival, it was a few weeks to the event and I was taking her to the food festival. I saw that there was a hard to find henna tattooist there. I took her to the booth and she couldn't believe that she was getting a henna tattoo when she was going to a food festival. She proceeded to interrupt our visit with a conversation with the henna artist about the best methods for henna tattoos. It took about two minutes to get out of there with my sanity still intact. I could go on and on with any of her antics. They are usually well timed, creative and altruistic in some way. She is always an active part of any event where she is invited. I have noticed that normally if she's in an events with other adults, she is the youngest one. She is such a sweetie. This "big day" will be probably be bad as the metaphor goes. When Bipolar Eider was born, there were too many people involved for her to cope with. People were doing things she didn't understand and she was too young to understand them, let alone approve them. The result was lots of chaos. She was in a car seat in the boot of a car. She pulled the curtains apart with the car still running because she wanted to see the crow she could smell outside. There was lots of screaming and jumping up and down as family and friends gathered to witness the birth of baby #2. Her mum and I stood away because, much like today, it can be a bit overwhelming watching the birth of a small child (and by small child, I mean MINIMUM of 3 hours for mum and me). One man looked in the car window and Bipolar was cuddling her little brother, a baby
